Editorial Review

From School Library Journal

Grade 7-9—Marianne, a French 15-year-old, is reluctantly working for the Resistance during World War II. The fear and pressure are getting to be too much for her, and she is angry with her mother for continuing to participate in the movement despite the mounting danger to the family. Marianne promised her father, who died while fighting, that she would care for her deaf brother and keep him from harm. Now a German officer has been billeted with the family, and a sickly British officer is hidden in the woodshed. Marianne never knows who is a fellow Resistance worker and who is colluding with the Nazis. Compounding her escalating terror is the predatory Nazi commanding officer who left one girl in a nearby town pregnant. The taut story line builds tension from the first page. Marianne's confusion and fear are realistically rendered. Yet she is a typical teenager who dreams of being a clothes designer someday, and only wants her family to be safe. This leads her to do something terrible that imperils all of them. Ultimately, she is forced to look beyond the war with its established enemies and allies to see real people and judge them as individuals. With winning characterization and a compelling plot, this quick read will appeal to reluctant readers as well as voracious ones.—Christina Stenson-Carey, Albany Public Library, NY

Gr. 7-10. Since the death of her father in the early days of World War II, 15-year-old Marianne has lived with a secret. Against Marianne's wishes, her mother has involved herself and both her children in Resistance work in their village near Caen, France. They are hiding and nursing an Englishman in their woodshed when the local German colonel decides to lodge one of his soldiers in their home. Terrified that Willi, the young soldier, will discover their invalid and turn them in, Marianne goes to extreme lengths to protect her family from the boarder and her virtue from the colonel, whose indecent advances present a different but parallel threat. Graber paints a convincing picture of French village life during the war, when some enemies were obvious but others were difficult to discern, and trusting the wrong person could be fatal. Throughout most of the first-person narrative, Marianne is driven by fear. Slowly, painfully, she discovers who is worthy of her trust, how to deal with those who are not, and what risks are worth taking. Carolyn Phelan
